INVESTIGATION:
10-YEAR REVIEW OF GENDER & EMMY NOMINATIONS

ABOUT THE WOMEN’S MEDIA CENTER

In 2005, Jane Fonda, Robin Morgan and Gloria Steinem founded the Women’s Media Center (WMC), a progressive, nonpartisan, nonprofit organization endeavoring to raise the visibility, viability and decision-making power of women and girls in media and, thereby, ensuring that their stories get told and their voices are heard.

To reach those necessary goals, we strategically use an array of interconnected channels and platforms to transform not only the media landscape but also a culture in which women’s and girls’ voices, stories, experiences and images are neither sufficiently amplified nor placed on par with the voices, stories, experiences and images of men and boys.

Our strategic tools include monitoring the media; commissioning and conducting research; and undertaking other special initiatives to spotlight gender and racial bias in news coverage, entertainment film and television, social media and other key sectors.

Our WMC Women Under Siege project investigates sexualized violence. Our original content channels — WMC Features, WMC FBomb, WMC Speech Project and the “Women’s Media Center Live with Robin Morgan” radio program — provide women’s perspectives on both headline stories and timely events that are ignored, not wholly captured or misrepresented in the mainstream media. Our content contributors are a racially and globally diverse group.

Our WMC training programs sharpen the media savvy and interview skills of women and girls. WMC SheSource, our ethnically diverse online brain trust of roughly 900 female experts on a wide array of topics, helps journalists, talent bookers and other content producers to get their jobs done.

Follow WMC on Twitter @womensmediacntr and on Facebook at www.facebook.com/womensmediacenter.
The nominations for the 67th Primetime Emmy Awards, announced July 16, reflect the same imbalance of male to female nominees that they have for the past decade. The Women’s Media Center analysis of the 2015 Primetime Emmy nominations concluded that nominations of women make up 25 percent of the total number of nominations in the writing, directing, editing, and producing categories.

Out of all the nominees nominated in 44 writing, directing, editing, and producing categories over the past decade, 2,074 of them were women, representing only 22 percent of the total. There were 7,485 men nominated, 78 percent of the total.

Although the Emmys cover many different jobs related to creating television programs, the Women’s Media Center focused on the categories of writing (6), directing (8), editing (10), and producing (20). In its analysis of the nominations made for the years 2006 through 2015, WMC sought to take a detailed look at the gender ratios of jobs that have the most influence on what is depicted on the small screen.

Julie Burton, President of the Women’s Media Center, noted, “The Women’s Media Center reviewed the Emmy categories of producing, writing, directing, and editing over a 10-year period. Clearly there is a connection between the broadcast, network, cable, and Netflix programs that hire exclusively male creators and the industry-wide gender divide. When there are few jobs for women, it is easy to see why so few women in non-acting categories are recognized for their excellence. Research by the Center for the Study of Women in Television & Film shows that in 2014-2015, women were 26 percent of executive producers, 38 percent of producers, 26 percent of writers, 14 percent of directors, and 21 percent of editors. The bottom line: if more women were hired as writers, directors, editors, producers, and especially as creators and executive producers, the talent pool for nominations would be more reflective of the overall population and audience — more than half of which are women.”

Pat Mitchell, Chair, Women’s Media Center Board of Directors, added: “Clearly, the number of nominees for Emmys is not representative of the impact or the accomplishments of women writers, directors, producers, editors — whose overall representation in all those categories is still far from equal to their talents or the opportunities, facts that the Women’s Media Center’s research so clearly indicates.”
Emmy Awards for Outstanding Writing

The Primetime Emmy Awards gives six awards for writing: Comedy Series; Drama Series; Variety Series; Variety Special; Nonfiction Programming; and Limited Series, Movie or Dramatic Special.

From 2006 to 2015, women made up 13 percent of all the nominees in these writing categories, earning 171 nominations to men’s 1,103.

Of all the writing categories, only one, Outstanding Writing for a Variety Series, has shown significant increases in both the number of women writers and the ratio of women compared to men. Over the past 10 years, the number of women nominated per year in this category grew from 4 to 14, and the percent of women nominated rose from 6 percent to 23 percent.

Two factors seem to have affected these particular numbers. First, earlier nominated shows often employed large groups of writers but had no women listed as writers for nominated episodes. Over time, certain shows that were nominated multiple times slightly increased the number of women writers on nominated episodes. For example, when The Daily Show With Jon Stewart was nominated in 2005, there were no women named in the nomination, but by 2015 the show’s nomination included four women.

And the inclusion of Inside Amy Schumer as a nominee in the category of Outstanding Writing for a Variety Series significantly increased the number of women writers. In 2014 the Inside Amy Schumer nomination included four women writers. As a 2015 nominee it is the only show among the nominees over the past decade to have more women writers (6) than men (4). Portlandia, whose 2012 nomination included two women and two men, is the only gender-balanced show nominated in that category in the past 10 years.

While other writing categories have not seen the same kind of growth, one particular show did have an impact: Mad Men.

In the category of Outstanding Writing for a Drama Series, women make up only 22 percent of nominees over the course of 10 years, but Mad Men accounts for a significant portion of the women nominated. During this period, there were 15 nominations that included a woman writer (10 women writers total) in this category, and 11 of those were for Mad Men scripts. In 2009, for example, while four men were nominated — and Matthew Weiner was nominated for four different Mad Men scripts — three women who worked on Mad Men episodes were also nominated. In both 2010 and 2012, two women were nominated for Mad Men scripts. In fact, 2012, when Semi Chellas co-wrote two nominated Mad Men episodes, was the only year in which a woman was nominated for two separate scripts in the same category in the same year. The other shows with women-written scripts nominated from 2006 to 2015 were Breaking Bad, The Killing, The Good Wife, and Grey’s Anatomy.

Emmy Awards for Outstanding Directing

From 2006 to 2015, women earned 8 percent of all directing nominations, 116 in all compared to 1,417 for men.

Over the past decade, only two women have been nominated for an award for Outstanding Directing for a Variety Series: Beth McCarthy-Miller in 2006 for a Saturday Night Live episode and Amy Schumer in 2015 for the episode “12 Angry Men Inside Amy Schumer.”

One explanation for the paucity of women nominees in this category is that the shows have had the same director for a number of years. For example, Chuck O’Neil, who was nominated every year of the past decade, was the only director of The Daily Show With Jon Stewart during that time. Aside from McCarthy-Miller’s nomination in 2006, all the Saturday Night Live nominations went to Don Roy King, who replaced her as the show’s director. (Beth McCarthy-Miller was later nominated for Outstanding Directing for a Comedy Series for 30 Rock episodes in 2013, 2011, and 2009.)

The Emmy category previously called “Outstanding Directing for a Variety, Music or Comedy Special” was changed in 2012 to “Outstanding Directing for a Variety Special”; some programs, such as The Oscars and the Tony Awards broadcasts, were nominees for the earlier award and have been for the current one. In seven years, only three women have been nominated for an Emmy in this category: Natalie Johns for Annie Lennox: Nostalgia Live in Concert in 2015, Beth McCarthy-Miller for The Sound of Music Live! in 2014, and Laurie-Ann Gibson for Lady Gaga Presents the Monster Ball Tour in 2011.

Most of the directing nominations have been in the two categories: Outstanding Technical Direction, Camerawork, Video Control for a Series (492 nominations from 2006) and Outstanding Technical Direction, Camerawork, Video Control for a Special (721). Within these two categories, men overwhelmingly predominated (458 and 686 respectively).

Emmy Awards for Outstanding Producing

In the past decade, women made up only 28 percent of the Primetime Emmy nominees in the 20 categories in which producers were nominated. That number for women has remained steady over the past 10 years, fluctuating within a narrow range of 25 to 30 percent. In 2015, only 30 percent of all nominees are women.

There are 20 Primetime Emmy categories for which producers are nominated: Outstanding Animated Program; Outstanding Short-Format Animated Program; Outstanding Comedy Series; Outstanding Drama Series; Outstanding Limited Series; Outstanding Television Movie; Outstanding Variety Talk Series; Outstanding Variety Sketch Series; Outstanding Variety Special; Outstanding Special Class Program; Outstanding Short-Format Live-Action Entertainment Program; Outstanding Short-Format Nonfiction Program; Outstanding Children’s Program; Outstanding Documentary or Nonfiction Special; Outstanding Documentary or Nonfiction Series; Outstanding Informational Series or Special; Exceptional Merit in Documentary Filmmaking; Outstanding Structured Reality Program; Outstanding Unstructured Reality Program; and Outstanding Reality-Competition Program.

By far, the highest concentration of women is to be found in the documentary film categories: Exceptional Merit in Documentary Filmmaking and Outstanding Documentary or Nonfiction Special. In fact, over the past decade, women have usually outnumbered men, 54 percent to 46 percent, in the Exceptional Merit in Documentary Filmmaking category. In 2015, 80 percent of those nominated as producers for Exceptional Merit in Documentary Filmmaking were women. In 2015, Laura Poitras and Mathilde Bonnefoy were nominated as the producers of Citizenfour, the documentary about Edward Snowden broadcast on HBO. Brave Miss World, a film about sexual assault that aired on Netflix in 2014, had four women producers: Cecelia Peck, Inbal B. Lessner, Lati Grobman, and Geralyn Dreyfous, the last two being executive producers. In the 2007 Emmy nominations, Sheila Nevins and Jacqueline Glover were named as the producers of When the Levees Broke: A Requiem in Four Acts, Spike Lee’s highly acclaimed film for HBO about Hurricane Katrina.

For Outstanding Documentary or Nonfiction Special, women make up 34 percent of the nominees in 2015 and 53 percent in 2014, and 55 percent in 2013. Over the past 10 years, women have made up 43 percent of this category, compared to 57 percent for men.

This finding correlates with previous studies that have shown that women tend to fare better in documentary film categories.

Beyond the documentaries, categories for which there were relatively higher numbers of women producers from 2006 to 2015 included Outstanding Reality-Competition and Outstanding Reality Program, 38 percent and 37 percent, respectively, although those numbers are still far below parity. Women were least represented in Outstanding Special Class Program and Outstanding Animated Program.

Emmy Awards for Outstanding Editing

From 2006 to 2015, women made up 18 percent of all nominees for editing awards, earning 147 nominations versus the 659 that went to men.

Only two of the editing categories showed progress in the number of women: Outstanding Single-Camera Picture Editing for a Drama Series and Outstanding Picture Editing For Nonfiction Programming. In 2015, women represented 40 percent of the drama category and 44 percent of the nonfiction programming category. The number of women nominees in the former was boosted by the AMC show Breaking Bad, which accounted for a significant number of the nominations. Over the decade, women accounted for 23 percent of the nominees for the Outstanding Single-Camera Picture Editing for a Drama Series award and 21 percent for Outstanding Picture Editing For Nonfiction Programming. The nonfiction programming category benefited largely from several HBO programs edited by women, including Citizenfour, The Case Against 8, Ethel, The Jinx: The Life and Deaths of Robert Durst, and By the People: The Election of Barack Obama.

From 2006 to 2015, women received the largest percentage of editing nominations for Outstanding Single-Camera Picture Editing For A Limited Series or Movie: 25 percent.

There were no women nominated in 2015 for Outstanding Multi-Camera Picture Editing for a Comedy Series or for Outstanding Picture Editing For Variety Programming.

Methodology
This analysis was drawn using information from Emmys.com. An individual was counted only once per category per year even if they were nominated multiple times in the same year for the same award. The names of the women nominated are in bold.

Footnote
*The Primetime Emmys does not include a producing category. The WMC report includes 20 categories in which producers are nominated.
